

Newsletter

Welcome

Writing a first newsletter is exciting to say the least. I feel like I have so much to say, and yet where to start? It is overwhelming. I think this is something that happens with our kids also. Many times my son has come home from school, and I asked him, "How was your day?" only to hear "fine" in a monotone. Then I press on with, "What did you do?" only to get another one word response, "Nothing." He probably did a hundred things that day. Which one should he talk about? The question is too big to answer. When I ask a more specific question like, "What did you play at lunch recess today." or "What did you work on in Social Studies today?" Then I am more likely to get a response that I can build a conversation from. With that in mind, I will remind myself that I don't need to talk about everything I know in this first newsletter, but just give you a few specific ideas to start.

I hope you find something that is helpful to you and your child.

ADHD Advantages: Creativity

Each newsletter I will be talking about the advantages of ADHD wiring. One of the most universal advantages of having ADHD is creativity. I don't think I know of one client or friend with ADHD that doesn't have some type of creative talent. Creativity isn't necessarily about being artistic although that is certainly common as well, but in all aspects of life--for example, in the kitchen, in handicrafts like knitting or woodworking, in business ideas, in scientific ideas, in movement like Martial arts or dance, in writing, and in music. Watch for your child's creativity. It may be an intricately designed double-decker sandwich or a really cool dance move. Let your child know that you recognize their amazing gifts.

ADHD can hurt self-confidence: 5 ways to rebuild it.

Children with ADHD are often misunderstood and in trouble even though they are just "being themselves." This experience often leads to a loss of self-confidence. Imagine a child with ADHD trying to keep his brain activated during a boring activity by wiggling around or making noises. He doesn't mean to be disruptive, but boy does he when he gets in trouble! "That boy is trouble!" Or imagine a girl who is so busy day dreaming to keep her brain activated that she has not heard the teacher's instructions or that she has forgotten to turn in her assignment. "That girl is such a space cadet!" These messages may not be spoken aloud, and yet to our children they come through loud and clear. How can we as parents re-build our children's self-confidence? How can we inoculate our children against harmful messages?

- 1.) Listen to your child – When your child expresses excitement in something – engage with that excitement. Getting a high score on Sonic Advanced Super Smash may not be terribly exciting to you, but acknowledging your child's accomplishment will mean the world to him. Likewise, when your child expresses upset about something, explore those feelings and help your child to feel understood. For example, if a friend is moving away and your child is feeling sad. Honor that sadness by helping your child talk about what she will miss about that friend. Don't try to make everything better by saying something like, "Don't worry, you will make more friends." While this may be true, it denies your child's feelings in the moment.

- 2.) Encourage your child's talents – With so many challenges, it may be tempting to force our children with ADHD to work harder on the things that they struggle with all the time. But, it is just as important to help them to find something that they are passionate about. Okay so math is like pulling teeth, but maybe she loves to draw. Have lots of art supplies around and make a big deal about her amazing artwork. She may never be a great mathematician, but maybe she will be a wonderful Graphic Designer some day.
- 3.) Talk about your child's accomplishments – Have you ever found yourself complaining about your child on the phone only to discover that he was listening? Try talking about his accomplishments right in front of him! While talking to your spouse, say, "Wow, did you notice how Tommy remembered to put his dishes in the dishwasher?" While talking on the phone to a friend, "I'm so proud of Jenny, she has been doing so well in school lately. . ." Remember they are listening, so give them something great to hear!
- 4.) Praise your child specifically – Instead of saying, "Good Job!" or "Way to go" make your praise more specific. This way your child will know exactly what it is that you appreciated about her actions. For example, say, "Wow you sure earned a lot of point on your videogame." "I noticed that you did three math problems in the last 10 minutes—that's pretty fast!" Put a lot of energy behind these words to make them really count with your child.
- 5.) Spend time just enjoying your child – Our lives get so busy that sometimes we forget to stop and just enjoy our children. Try to spend at least 20 minutes each day doing something fun with your child. It can be something active like a game or something quiet like reading a story together. Talk to your child about what they are interested in talking about, and just have fun together. Believe me this will pay huge benefits in building your child's confidence and in building a strong connection together. Enjoy!

Quick Tip

To help build motivation, link something your child really likes—such as a movie or a videogame to something that is not motivating. For example, my son really likes the theme song from the movie "Madagascar" so to motivate him to put his shoes on or start his homework, we start singing the song and change the words around a bit to fit the situation. "You've got to move it, move it. You've got to put your shoes on." It brings a smile to his face and a spring to his step, and it's a whole lot more fun than nagging!

ADHD Advantage Saturday Camps starting soon!

Saturday camps are starting in September! Camps are designed to help kids with ADHD to learn self-confidence, self-mastery, and friendship skills while having a lot of fun! We keep our groups small (6 maximum) so that we can customize each camp to fit the specific needs of our campers. We keep things moving at camp with lots of fun activities like art, cooking, dramatic play, and music. Camps are designed for kids aged 6 through 12. Call today to reserve a spot and get the advantage for your child.

Thank you

We just want to take a moment to thank you all for inviting us into your lives. Helping families is our greatest passion, and we appreciate your trust. Let us know how we can serve you.

Karen and Dan DeBolt
ADHD Advantage
<http://www.ADHDAdvantage.com>

Please feel free to forward this message, I just ask that you include our contact information and the copyright message below. Thanks for spreading the word!

If you would prefer to not receive this newsletter, please reply with the word "unsubscribe" in the subject line. We will never share your information with anyone, we hate spam!

© Karen DeBolt, MA 2006 All Rights Reserved